

BISHOP SATTERLEE'S RETURN

Back from Inspecting English Cathedrals—Other Arrivals.

Bishop Henry J. Satterlee of Washington, D. C., was among the passengers who arrived on the Red Star liner Kroonland yesterday. Bishop Satterlee said that he had been away about six weeks inspecting the English cathedrals with a view to adopting all that is good in them and rejecting all that is not good in the construction of the new Cathedral of St. Paul and St. Luke which will be erected in Washington.

Rear Admiral C. S. Sperry, United States Navy, also arrived on the Kroonland with Gen. R. M. O'Reilly and Lieut. D. W. Wurstbaugh of the army. They were the American delegates to the Geneva Conference to revise the Treaty of Geneva, which was signed by the powers in 1865 for the protection of the sick and wounded in war. The treaty was changed so as to meet the requirements of modern warfare.

Admiral Sperry said that the most important alteration was one which provided that societies or auxiliaries must be regularly incorporated and recognized by their Government before they could fly the Red Cross flag. Such societies are to be accorded every privilege and immunity received by the regular hospital corps, but they must be under military control.

Other arrivals on the Kroonland were Major Church Howe, the United States Consul General at Montreal; Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Cook, Capt. R. E. Burdick, Col. Henry B. Rose, Mr. and Mrs. George N. Rowe, and E. C. Towne.

Negroes to Observe Brown's Centenary

A large delegation of colored clergymen, professional and business, left here yesterday for Harper's Ferry, West Va., where negroes from thirty States will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the birth of John Brown, in connection with the Niagara Movement. The Niagara Movement was organized about a year ago to obtain for the negro race the full enjoyment of every right and privilege of American citizens.
